

The Business Agility Checklist

by Roger T. Burlton, Ronald G. Ross & John A. Zachman¹

Have you achieved business agility?

Not unless ...

- You have minimized risk of catastrophic failure.
- Your business managers can make simple course corrections without fear of prohibitive IT costs.
- Your business managers have time to consider the big picture instead of always fighting fires.
- Your customers get consistent business results through all channels.
- You can demonstrate compliance anywhere, anytime, in real time.
- You can manage complexity at scale as a matter of course.
- Your core business processes are not impacted when you lose key workers.
- You do not have to reinvent, respecify and redesign core business knowledge from scratch on each new project.
- You coordinate and disseminate core business knowledge to workers in a systematic way.
- You know what your business rules are and you can change them easily.
- Your corporate memory is automated and free of disconnects and gaps.
- Your software release cycle is largely irrelevant to changes in business policy.
